

HURRICANE MICHAEL TRAVEL ADVISORY

Information about Hurricane Michael

Hurricane Michael has made landfall in Florida's north-west Panhandle region. It is expected to continue moving up the east coast. The US National Hurricane Center is warning residents not to venture out into the eye of the storm, as winds will quickly increase when it passes. Those who have not already left are being advised to stay in their homes by the Florida Governor.

We are urging customers to take care during their travels

As we write the storm has intensified after making landfall close to Mexico Beach. Gulf Power have reported that there are 77,874 households in the region without power and a number of Florida homes are fully submerged. As the storm intensifies, to the strongest storm to hit the continental U.S. since Hurricane Andrew in 1992, the world media are raising the question; will there soon be the need for Category 6 hurricanes.
